From the Chamber

A very local summer has come to an end – a summer in which we enjoyed the best of home, could support each other and Live Love Local.

Despite summer being over, the need to support our local communities post-COVID continues and I am delighted that Council unanimously voted to extend our business-parklet program until the end of June. These parklets have provided opportunities for our hospitality traders to employ new staff and keep serving their customers and we hope you continue to enjoy them into the cooler months.

Following this uncertain time, it is wonderful that the Yaluk-ut Weelam Ngargee Festival returns to St Kilda from Thursday 25 to Sunday 28 March. With online offerings and live events, the festival will showcase a diverse program of First Nations talent in a COVID-safe way. You can read more in our feature article – and I hope to see you there.

We're lucky in our City to have an engaged and passionate community with a deep well of knowledge and lived experience.

To make sure that we are creating genuine and transparent opportunities for you to provide feedback and inform the decisions being made, we have recently adopted a new Community Engagement Policy, which you can read here.

Engaging with our community is core to what we do at Council. It involves having conversations and working with people who are interested in or may be affected by Council's decision-making. It also provides opportunities for our community and Council to learn together and build shared knowledge through experiences, actions and learnings.

You can read more about how you can get involved in the Shape your City section below, or visit Have Your Say. Your contribution allows Council to have a greater understanding of diverse points of view, values, concerns and priorities when making decisions and enhances our capacity to make well-informed, acceptable and sustainable decisions on your behalf.

Regards,

Cr Louise Crawford
Mayor, City of Port Phillip

Parklets continue to support local business

Published 11 March 2021

If you've been out and about in our City these past few months, it's likely that you've seen our business parklets – you may even have dined or had coffee at one. We recently announced that this program will be extended until at least the end of June. Here we look at its positive impact.

Back to Diversity

Business parklets involve the temporary repurposing of parking bays outside businesses to increase footpath trading while offering patrons a COVID-safe environment to enjoy a meal. They also provide opportunities for hospitality traders to employ new staff.

As part of Live Love Local, 64 hospitality traders have installed business parklets on roads to assist with their post-lockdown recovery efforts.

We're incredibly proud of the contribution the parklet program has made to our hospitality traders with 64 per cent of them saying they've been able to retain staff due to the parklets and 71.5 per cent being able to engage new staff.

Keeping hospitality flourishing is vital for all businesses in our neighbourhoods as busy cafes and restaurants have flow on effects of trade to other retailers.

Many members of our community have enjoyed utilising the spaces for their catch ups with friends and family and we are happy to announce that this program will be extended until at least end-June with a further extension to December possible.

This extension allows Council to continue supporting traders while providing additional time to progress with developing the criteria for a longer-term program.

This is a great result for our traders and community. We hope you continue to enjoy the parklets (and the amazing hospitality our City has to offer) into the cooler months.

The little game that could

Another initiative that provided both support for traders and local fun for the community was our old-school Spotto game, which gave participants the chance to win a prize pack valued at $1,000 simply by exploring Port Phillip and supporting our local stores.

The prize packs included $100 gift vouchers from 90 businesses from across the City providing a cost benefit of around $10,000 in total for traders.

The competition also required participants to spend at least $10 in local businesses. With 1,007 entries and participants spending on average $43, Spotto contributed more than $43,000 to our local economy.

Spotto also provided a sense of town pride when considering local icons, connection to neighbourhoods as well as nostalgia for parents and guardians playing the game with children.

“Just wanted to give some great feedback about Spotto. My five-year-old played it in Albert Park yesterday and it was such a great activity – she would pop into cafés and ask the traders if they had seen any of the items, and they loved getting involved with her! It felt like such a great way to connect traders with the community” - Port Phillip Resident

Here are some other Live Love Local initiatives that have been supporting our City's recovery.

Open for business directory

We've built a local business directory so you can find out which restaurants, cafes and other businesses are open for business in your neighbourhood. We encourage ordering directly from businesses rather than using food delivery apps or services. By calling directly, the full cost you pay goes straight to the local venue.

Stay and Play

Collect virtual gems and enter the Hidden Gems Competition to win weekly prizes until the end of April 2021.

Community parklets

Community parklets have turned parking bays into a place where you can safely gather to meet friends, eat lunch, enjoy a coffee, read a book or play with your family.

Play Streets

A Play Street involves the temporary closure of a street, reimagining the street as family-friendly public space, encouraging connection and play through safe, inclusive and accessible programming. Visit a Play Street as they debut this month.

Yaluk-ut Weelam Ngargee Festival returns in 2021

Published 9 March 2021

Feedback

Yaluk-ut Weelam Ngargee Festival 2021

This year will see four exciting days that celebrate and showcase First Peoples arts and culture.

Back to Divercity

Events featuring talented First Nations female performers and music legend Archie Roach are highlights of this month's Yaluk-ut Weelam Ngargee First Peoples Arts and Cultural Festival (YWN).

Previously a one-day event held by Port Phillip Council on the first weekend of February, the festival will run from 25 to 28 March, with a mix of onsite and virtual events to meet COVIDSafe requirements.

The festival opens on Thursday 25 March with a night of song, ceremony, dance and immersive art at Memo Music Hall, St Kilda

Named for the current season as identified by the Boonwurrung, Gareeal (summer rains) is an all-female First Peoples production co-curated by Allara Briggs Pattison, featuring performances by Alice Skye, Bumpy, Monica Jasmine Karo and accompanied by string arrangements by Ensemble Dutala and friends. Gareeal celebrates the collective and individual journey all living things take, and the powerful connection to the land.

The festival also features a landmark performance from music legend Archie Roach, who will be performing Koorie, his grassroots album from 1988, on Saturday 27 March at the Espy.

Replay, Koorie (1988): The early protest songs of Archie Roach, will celebrate Archie's little-known connection to St Kilda, revisiting the songs he wrote while living behind St Kilda's Village Belle Hotel in the 80s. The intimate concert has been curated especially for the festival, with special guests joining Archie to talk, sing and celebrate the underground tape.

"It's impossible to think about St Kilda's music history without thinking of Archie Roach and the powerful songs he wrote. This event is a fantastic opportunity to experience an intimate performance from Archie in St Kilda and hear the powerful stories behind the songs," Mayor Louise Crawford said.

Cr Crawford said Port Phillip Council had adapted many of its festivals to meet COVIDSafe requirements, including last year's popular St Kilda Film Festival, Mabo Day and NAIDOC Week events.

"It's exciting that we can continue to showcase First Peoples arts and culture this year. As well as this cultural event now being held over four days, the online component makes Yaluk-ut Weelam Ngargee festival even more accessible for both our community and audiences across Australia."

To celebrate International Women's Day (IWD) and Women's History Month we're recognising the work and achievements of significant local women with a series of events including a unique and thought-provoking Poster Project.

Throughout March, we're inviting you to join us on a quest to explore the rich history, cultural heritage and untold stories of influential Port Phillip women by keeping an eye out for posters around the city.

The posters feature a scannable QR code that links through to an individual biography of each woman. You'll find posters on walls, street corners, at local shopping centres in Port Phillip and virtually on our Facebook page.

Creating this project involved local museums, historical societies and cultural organisations coming together to share stories about women who have made important contributions to our community in past and present times.

Present subjects, Boon Wurrung elder Parbin-ata Dr Carolyn Briggs and multicultural community leaders Anu Bajwa, Alba Chliakhtine and Kelly Kotsonis debuted the project at our International Women's Day 2021 conversation-based community event on 4 March.

The event was a wonderful opportunity for members of our community to celebrate, get to know Port Phillip women and engage with this year's IWD theme of #ChooseToChallenge, a reminder that we can all choose to seek out women's achievements.

Back to Diversity

On Tuesday 2 March 2021 the Renew Fitzroy Street project debuted as participating businesses opened up their doors to Fitzroy Street for the very first time.

Delivered in partnership by City of Port Phillip, Renew Australia and Fitzroy Street Business Association (FSBA), the initiative encourages makers, creators, artists and social enterprises to occupy the vacant retail space where they can bring their creative ideas to life.

Council contributed $75,000 to the project, which was matched by FSBA.

Mayor Louise Crawford visited the newly opened spaces on Tuesday and said she was excited to see the project come to fruition.

“Renew Fitzroy Street is a fantastic project which supports both emerging and existing traders. It’s been a tough year for retail due to COVID-19 and we’re proud to be supporting our community to bounce back,” Cr Crawford said.

“We’re look forward to seeing these seven creatives thrive, as they contribute to an important period of growth and development of Fitzroy Street. I encourage everyone to come down to Fitzroy Street to see the wonderful things that are happening.”

Flo & Co. owner, Sam Sagginelli said the opportunity had allowed her to expand her client base, as well as work with other creatives.

“Previously, most of my business leads have come via my website, social media or word of mouth, whereas now I get to make instant connections with my customers. The initiative has been fantastic, as everyone who is part of Renew Fitzroy Street is new to bricks and mortar retail, which means we’ve been able to support each other through the highs and lows. I can’t wait to share my work with more people and grow my business,” Miss Sagginelli said.

As part of a recent funding boost and the Suburban Parks Program, the Victorian Government is working with local councils, including the City of Port Phillip, to deliver 18 new parks and nine off-leash dog parks.

Mayor Louise Crawford said, “Some exciting news for the pups of Port Phillip. Council will receive funding from the state government to deliver a dog off-leash park at Moran Reserve in Elwood.”

Parks were selected for funding based on their accessibility by road, public transport or well-linked to bike and walking tracks.

With allocated funding of up to $275,000, the Moran Reserve will be transformed into a safe and lively space for social activity and recreation, for pooch pals and their owners.

The dog parks have been purposefully planned and designed to include features such as designated ball play areas, rockeries, education and agility equipment and seating.

“These parks will create local jobs while they’re being built, boost surrounding local businesses and provide social, health and wellbeing benefits for families and their pets for years to come,” said Lily D’Ambrosio, Minister for Energy, Environment and Climate Change.

St Kilda finally has a 'village bell' ringing out, more than 80 years after the distinctive Catani Memorial Clock Tower appeared on the foreshore.

The digital chimes, turned on by Port Phillip Council today, replicate the solemn tones of a classic clock tower bell. In a further nod to the past, the chimes were installed by the same company responsible for activating the clockface and mechanism in 1932.

Following extensive community consultation with nearby residents and traders, the chimes will sound on the hour from 8 am to 10 pm on weekdays and 9 am to 10 pm on weekends.

Carlo Catani, who died in 1918, set the design principles for the St Kilda foreshore to be a cosmopolitan Mediterranean-style entertainment and promenading park scape.

His vision included a prominent public clock tower as the centrepiece, and a tower was delivered posthumously after a design competition in 1930 - but without a bell.

Digital chimes have many advantages, including easy to control sound and directional settings.

Mayor Louise Crawford said the chimes provide a moment of stillness and a sense of community as residents and visitors go about their daily life.

"This project represents a great combination of the old and the new, fully in keeping with St Kilda's reputation as a unique destination. The chimes will be able to be heard nearby on Victoria's most popular beach," Cr Crawford said.

Council is planning to hold an event later this year to celebrate the completion of the Catani Memorial Clock Tower chimes project.

The idea to complete the bell tower was raised by resident Isaac Hermann and championed by former councillor David Brand.
